

IT'S THE PRESIDENT'S DAUGHTER AND SHE'S CARRYING A CANE!

Washington, Nov. 15.—The president's daughter Eleanor has just made the capital gasp by carrying a cane.

Now Washington society women are putting in rush orders for walking sticks. The fad is bound to be the rage since the president's daughter and wife of Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo started it.

The cane Mrs. McAdoo carried is an ebony-hued piece with a crooked handle inlaid with silver. Sometimes she swings it in her hand and sometimes she hooks it over her arm.

Nearly every afternoon now Mrs. McAdoo dons a smart-tailored walking suit and with Miss Helen Woodrow Bones, President Wilson's niece, goes for a long walk.

Just the other day the president and Mrs. Galt in a white house automobile passed the pair. What did Mrs. McAdoo do—why she laughed and waved her cane at them.

That gave the official stamp to the fad—and so "carrying a cane" is the thing in Washington.

—○—○— A NOVEL GIFT

Soak whole allspice in warm water until the berries are soft enough to pierce with a needle. Use medium coarse needle and heavy twist; gold, silver or pearl beads may be used between the allspice with good effect.
